MATCH PREVIEW – Michael Duffy

Cork City are unbeaten in their last eight games against Bray Wanderers. Wanderers had lost six successive games in all competitions to Cork City before this season.

Bray Wanderers last victory over Cork City was on the final day of the 2016 season with a 4-1 Premier division win at the Carlisle Grounds. Goal scorers that night were Jason Marks, Dylan Connolly, John Sullivan and Ger Pender.

Honours are even this season between the sides with both previous games this season ending in draws. The sides played out a scoreless draw at the Carlisle Grounds in April. The return fixture in Turners Cross in July ended in a 2-2 draw after Wanderers staged a late recovery from two goals down to snatch a point. Cian Murphy scored both Cork City goals on four and 55 minutes. Darren Craven pulled one back for Wanderers on 83 minutes before Andrew Quinn netted a dramatic equaliser in stoppage time. Wanderers had gone six games without scoring against Cork City prior to this game.

Cian Murphy is Cork's top league goal scorer this season with ten goals to his credit. Joe Doyle is Bray Wanderers top scorer on seven goals.

Cork City are on a good run of form at present. They have lost just one of their last nine league games, a 0-2 home defeat to league leaders Shelbourne. Cork have won three, drawn five and lost once in their last nine league games. They put in impressive performances in their FAI cup campaign this season defeating Sligo Rovers 3-2 away in round 1 before going out to St. Patrick's Athletic in a penalty shootout after a 1-1 draw.

Anything but a win for Cork tonight will end their slim hopes of making a playoff spot.

Dan Jones misses out for Bray tonight due to suspension following his red card away to Cobh Ramblers last week.

Previous Meeting

12 October 2007 Bray Wanderers 1 Cork City 1

Inside the first minute, Emeka Onwubiko had an attempt which was well saved by Michael Devine. Alan Cawley's effort two minutes later was deflected out by Liam Kearney for a corner. Chris Deans' header from the resulting corner was saved by Devine.

Wanderers took the lead following an Alan Cawley free kick which Deans nodded on, and Paddy Kavanagh scored with a spectacular overhead kick which beat Devine. Minutes later, Devine had to be alert to cut out an Onwubiko cross.

The introduction of Cillian Lordan at half time inspired a better Cork performance in the second half. Bray were under pressure especially from several Gareth Farrelly free kicks which were dealt with.

The pressure paid off in the 65th minute when Denis Behan got to a Farrelly cross to head home from close range inside a crowded goalmouth.

Cork was in control after that with Farrelly, Kearney, McSweeney and Woods all having shots on goal.

Bray had a chance from a breakaway when James O'Shea forced Devine into a save. Stephen Fox then shot over while Alan Cawley had the final chance of the game which Devine saved easily.

QUIGLEY'S WORLD OF FOOTBALL

“Chopper”

Would you cycle a Raleigh Chopper to the Nou Camp to see your brother's team play soccer? Perhaps it would be easier to just fly. If you had one of these bicycles in the 1970's then you'll remember it fondly. The design always reminds me of the motorcycles in Easy Rider, elongated saddle and handlebars uniquely high up, Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper as Captain America and Billy, freewheeling across the USA to get to the New Orleans Mardi Gras.

I wasn't surprised when the Chopper was revived this millennium after 25 years out of production. The original bicycle, with its differently sized wheels [20 inches at the rear and 16 inches at the front], frame-mounted gear shift and long, padded high-backed seat were a symbol of cool when I was a boy [I never had one, although one of my brothers did].

Enough about bicycles, though. There was another 'Chopper' at large at the time, namely Ron 'Chopper' Harris of Chelsea. Harris was a tough-tackling, talented yet uncompromising defender, so 'Chopper' was an apt nickname. He was at Chelsea for an incredibly long time, starting out as an apprentice in 1960 and finishing as a veteran in 1980 with 795 club appearances. He still holds the records at Chelsea for most appearances overall, most appearances in the League and most appearances in the FA Cup.

Harris' haul of medals at Chelsea includes winner's medals in the FA Youth Cup, FA Cup, League Cup and European Cup Winners Cup. For several years in the 1960's he played in the same side as his older brother Allan. Unlike Ron, Allan didn't stay long-term at Chelsea – he also played for Queen's Park Rangers, Coventry City, Cambridge United, Plymouth Argyle and our own St Patrick's Athletic [seven games in 1976 to bring the curtains down on his playing career].

After his time at Chelsea ended, Ron Harris moved on to Brentford to wind down his career. He tried management [briefly, at Aldershot] before settling down to life as a greyhound trainer. Allan was more successful at soccer management, and between 1984 and 1986 was assistant to Terry Venables at Barcelona. I'm assuming 'Chopper' went over to watch a few games, and that he didn't cycle!

'Chopper' is still alive and well and is now 76. Allan Harris passed away in 2017 aged 74. Prior to moving to Barcelona with Venables, he had assisted him at Crystal Palace and QPR [where they guided the London side to the 1982 FA Cup final and promotion to the old First Division in 1982-83]. At Barcelona La Liga was won in 1984-85 and the 1986 European Cup final reached. Allan subsequently managed in his own right, at Egyptian club Al Ahly where he had African Cup success and with the Malaysian national team.

Finally, I'd like to send good wishes to former Ireland international Joe Kinnear. It was announced recently that Joe is suffering from dementia; unfortunately, this is a condition that is affecting too many former soccer players to ignore. Also, Jimmy Greaves passed away recently. Jimmy was an iconic figure on television in my childhood, alongside Ian St John. Both had been iconic players back in the 1960's and 1970's [St John passed away earlier this year]

Player Profile Dan Jones

Age:34

Dan has made just over 300 league appearances in his career to date. He began his career at Wolverhampton Wanderers Academy and progressed to the youth team before turning professional in January 2005. While with Wolves he had loan spells with Northampton Town, Oldham Athletic, Notts County and Bristol Rovers.

He moved to Sheffield Wednesday in June 2010 and was part of the team that won promotion to the championship in 2011/12.

He joined Port Vale in January 2013 and helped the club to secure promotion out of League Two in 2012-13.

Dan featured in some pre-season fixtures for Bray Wanderers in February 2021. He joined Bray Wanderers on 1st July 2021. He was sent off in last weeks 2-1 win over Cobh Ramblers and will miss tonight's game through suspension.

Not just a Pretty Park

Mícheál Ó hUanacháin looks at the blitz development of Bray a century and a half ago that ended with the Carlisle Grounds

The collapse of the eaves on a number of houses on Goldsmiths Terrace, Quinsboro Road, during the summer reminds us that Bray experienced an unusually rapid development as a town immediately following the arrival of the railway in 1854. It was during that boom that Goldsmiths Terrace was built.

A number of factors fed the growing town, particularly the growth of health and fitness fashions. Ireland had not had a tradition of "taking the waters", the fancy for the health-giving properties of mineral-rich spring waters that had spread throughout Europe in the eighteenth century. Nor had the country enjoyed the growth of a "middle class" that had followed the industrial revolution in England and underpinned the development of coastal towns suitable for sea-bathing, another fashionable and supposedly healthy recreation.

Impressed with the "Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of All Nations" in London in 1851, for which the Crystal Palace building had been erected in Hyde Park, William Dargan proposed to the Royal Dublin Society that a similar one be mounted in the "second City of Empire". The RDS had elected him a life member that year, in acknowledgment of the hundreds of miles of new Irish railways he had been involved in, which had also made him a rich man. He now offered £20,000 to fund his plan, the equivalent of more than €2.5 million today.

A single building, located on Leinster Lawn, to the East of Leinster House, housed the entire Great Industrial Exhibition of 1853 in Dublin, which lasted from 12 May to 31 October. Queen Victoria, accompanied by the Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales, visited it on 29 August, later calling on Dargan at his home, Mount Anville in south Dublin, and reportedly offering him a baronetcy – which he declined. The architect, John Benson, was knighted.

Dargan wound up paying for the whole exhibition, which had gone way over budget, contemporary accounts speaking of it costing him "sixty to eighty thousand pounds" – and it was a commercial flop.

The following year he arrived in Bray with his latest railway project, and soon realised that the sleepy fishing village had enormous potential. It was already popular with the very rich and would now be accessible for the merely wealthy. John Quin, proprietor of the former Meath Arms, later the Royal Hotel, had acquired the land between there and the new rail line, and he and Dargan, with Edward Breslin and John Brennan, a returned Yank, set about developing the new seaside resort they had imagined.

Dargan was responsible for Duncairn Terrace (originally Dargan Terrace), Prince of Wales Terrace and the much longer Goldsmiths Terrace, Breslin built the Marine Station Hotel opposite what is now the Hibernia Inn, and Brennan developed the International Hotel, once supposedly the biggest hotel in the British Isles. Between them they invented the fashionable end of the town, and their work is the basis of the seaward part of the Quinsboro Road as it is still seen today.

Goldsmiths was the only one of the Quinsboro Road terraces with its doors at street level, and accordingly has suffered most from twentieth century commercial redevelopment.

Quinsboro Road in the 1860s, with the Turkish Baths (left)

But that was only part of the plan. Dargan took a strip of land on the sea front on a peppercorn lease from Lord Meath and developed and landscaped it at his own expense to make it convenient not only for "promenading", but also for sea bathing. The weather on the East Coast was highly suitable for the idea of "bracing", meaning healthful walks, promoted at the time by the new seaside resorts in England. The sea walk was known for years as the Dargan Esplanade. At its northern end, Martello Terrace, right on the sea, was also built at this time, a men's bathing place opened beside it a year later.

Ireland was not noted for mineral springs to base Spa towns on: Lisdoonvarna in Co Clare and Lucan, just west of Dublin, were the only notable establishments of that sort at the time, and Wicklow was no better served. However, a new health fashion was growing, and might serve just as well to attract visitors.

Closely intertwined with bathing and 'taking the waters', hydrotherapy covers all sorts of water treatment: cold showers, steam baths, blanket baths, and many more. Some types of hydrotherapy were highly controversial, but that did not mean it was shunned – on the contrary, it seemed to attract the curious and the easily persuaded.

Dr Edward Haughton was a son of a Dublin businessman who would soon be Chairman of the Great Southern and Western Railway Company, and whom Dargan had known for years. He spent time in Dr Richard Barter's clinic in Blarney as a “weakly and ailing” teenager and became convinced of hydrotherapy's value. In January 1860 he opened a Hydropathic Establishment in Galtrim House, between Quin's hotel and the railway, formerly the Quin family house and named after the town near their original home in Co Meath.

Haughton's mentor, Dr Barter, had preceded him in another addition to Quinsboro Road, Dargan's idiosyncratic pseudo-oriental Turkish Baths building which had cost £10,000 when it was completed the previous year. Both doctors were convinced of the benefits of their treatments but would probably now be classed as 'quacks': Haughton in particular was very hostile to the new vaccination treatment, a Victorian anti-vaxxer.

Both these “medical” establishments catered to what they hoped would be a growing upper-class clientele similar to that of the original Brighton, on which this new resort was conceptually based. Neither, however, lasted very long, the Baths being converted for Assembly Rooms within a decade, and Bray failing to garner the reputation of a spa town.
